Passage 1 (Read questions 9 and 10 before listening to Passage 1)

Thank you very much. The reason I'm here today is to present a new system that could bring big changes to the way Taiwan plans for disasters. This is called Building Recognition using AI at Large-Scale, or BRAILS for short. Using BRAILS, we can create simulated buildings in the computer and then put them through a disaster to see its effects. We've used past real-life events like the 1999 Jiji Earthquake to test this out. The results were consistently between 90 and 100% accurate reflections of what really happened. Taiwan's disaster prevention agencies can use BRAILS as an effective tool to protect people from future events. I hope that you'll consider adopting my research team's system as a way to make Taiwan stronger against natural disasters. (Oct. Unit 11)

A 9. Who might the speaker be talking to?

(A) A government body in charge of managing disasters.

(B) A team of AI programmers developing a new system.

(C) A newspaper reporter writing about a new AI tool.

(D) A group of students studying natural disasters.

D 10. What does the speaker say about the 1999 Jiji Earthquake?

(A) The BRAILS tool could have helped it cause less damage.

(B) There could be another earthquake like it happening soon.

(C) The system was able to predict the event before it happened.

(D) A simulation of it was used to test the BRAILS system.
