Paragraph A

Fondue is a traditional winter dish dating back to 18th-century Switzerland. Like many other comfort foods, it grew out of necessity rather than a love of food. Back then, the Swiss had to store up food to survive the harsh winters. Summer cheeses would harden and excess bread would go stale. Instead of wasting the food, the Swiss melted the cheese and mixed it with white wine, herbs, and garlic. Dipping the stale bread into this mixture softened it, and the original fondue was born. Today, the recipe for fondue is more refined, but the main ingredients remain the same. Emmentaler and Gruyère are the most commonly used cheeses. To this day, fondue is still a hot, satisfying meal on a cold winter day. (延伸自 12 Unit 10)
